Workload assessment

As the leader in workload assessment for courts and justice system partners in the U.S. and internationally, the National Center for State Courts employs a sophisticated multi-method approach to translating caseload into workload. The highly participatory process integrates empirical data with stakeholder perspectives on quality of justice and effective practices. The results of workload assessments assist states in:

- providing empirical support for budget requests to the legislature,
- assessing resource equity among courts or offices across the state, and
- managing the distribution of resources across various case types and functions within individual offices.

NCSC has conducted workload assessments for judges, court staff, prosecutors, and public defenders in nearly 30 states. Click a state in the map below for details on NCSC workload assessments completed in that state. (This presentation may be slightly delayed as the data loads.)
For additional resources and publications, see NCSC's Workload and Resource Assessment Resource Guide.

Source data

All Workload Assessments (xlsx)